Are Your Co-Workers Making You Sick?

It’s February and in many places the cold and flu season is in full swing. While colds and the flu can be contracted any time of the year, the months from October through April generally are considered the cold and flu season. As with many adults, you may spend most of your day at work, making it more likely that you will pick up germs there.

The Life@Work article in the February issue of Desktop Wellness will educate you on keeping your workplace clean and healthy to help you prevent illness during this cold and flu season.

OTHER ARTICLES

- The Heart-Brain Connection
- Ayurveda – About this Ancient Holistic Theory of Medicine
- A Breakdown of Nuts and Their Health Benefits
- Safety Features to Consider When Buying a Car
Are Your Co-Workers Making You Sick?

It’s February and in many places the cold and flu season is in full swing. While colds and the flu can be contracted any time of the year, the months from October through April generally are considered the cold and flu season. As with many adults, you may spend most of your day at work, making it more likely that you will pick up germs there.

The Life@Work article in the February issue of Desktop Wellness will educate you on keeping your workplace clean and healthy to help you prevent illness during this cold and flu season.

OTHER ARTICLES

- The Heart-Brain Connection
- Ayurveda – About this Ancient Holistic Theory of Medicine
- A Breakdown of Nuts and Their Health Benefits
- Safety Features to Consider When Buying a Car

Access this health resource by going to www.desktopwellness.com/tri-c

Employees: Type your Tri-C email addresses in the User Name box.
Type “Tri-C” in the Password box.

Students: Type your Social Security number in the User Name box.
Type “Tri-C” in the Password box.

©2005 Desktop Wellness, Inc. All Rights Reserved.